St. Paul's Cathedral—The Nave. St. Paul's is the central object and the most prominent building in modern London. Begun in 1675 under Sir Christopher Wren, it was completed in 1710. The total cost was about £1,000,000, the greater part of the sum being raised by coal and wine dues. In 1858-60 the choir screen was removed; in 1870 the organ divided and placed at the west end of the choir; in 1888 the reredos was completed, and 1892 saw the Wellington Memorial transferred to the nave.
